Police Integrity

The COPS Office has taken a lead role in promoting police integrity and has supported the equal treatment of citizens as a priority since FY1996. COPS sponsored the first National Symposium on Police Integrity and followed up with a series of regional technical assistance conferences. COPS goal was to facilitate a national dialogue on significant integrity issues. COPS expanded its investment in integrity to include racial profiling and hosted a problem solving working group on police stops and searches. COPS also organized the Department of Justice's Conference on Police-Community Relationships and participated in follow-up working groups. These efforts culminated in a police-integrity focus that concentrated on the effective use of early warning systems, complaint investigations, use of force policies, and racial profiling.

The goal of COPS Police Integrity Initiatives is to meet emerging and changing law enforcement needs by assisting agencies in creating or strengthening local programs that build trust between police and their communities. Ongoing strategies include best practices, the development of model problem-solving partnerships, and national training to be delivered through COPS national network of Regional Community Policing Institutes.

Creating a Culture of Integrity

Funded in FY2002, the objective of this grant program is to build on and strengthen the police integrity initiatives developed by COPS for purposes of creating community policing environments that foster trust and mutual respect between police and citizens. This plan builds on past initiatives but expands COPS efforts to create a culture of integrity in police departments. This expansion includes grants to 60 law enforcement agencies and 42 state chiefs' and sheriffs' associations.

The law enforcement agencies are funded to design a strategy that will assist them in responding proactively to significant police integrity issues. The project will develop best practices that support a culture of integrity in law enforcement agencies.

Strategy areas include:

- Use of force policy and training
- Development of early intervention systems
- Mapping integrity violations and related interventions
- Self assessment techniques for internal monitoring
- Strengthening internal affairs division operations
- Improving citizen complaint processes
- Utilizing a civilian review board
- Command staff integrity training
- Ensuring accountability to the community
- Outreach to minority youth
- Traffic stop data collection
- Recruiting quality personnel from local communities

The state chiefs' and sheriffs' associations are funded to host police integrity training workshops at their annual meetings. This initiative will help support law enforcement agencies across the country to focus their efforts on creating cultures of integrity.

Topic areas include:

- Integrity training to support community policing
- Homeland security and police integrity
- Building public trust & confidence
- Integrity challenges to police leadership
- Developing policy that strengthens integrity

Collaborative Leadership Project

Funded in FY01 and expanded in FY02, the Collaborative Leadership Project creates models for developing local solutions to community problems that affect police integrity. These collaborative partnerships combine national expertise with local stakeholders and focus on problem-solving. The local partners consist of a law enforcement agency and a community organization, where there is a historically challenging relationship. These projects result in model partnerships and best practices focused on important integrity issues that can be replicated across the country.

Promoting Cooperative Strategies to Reduce Racial Profiling

Funded in FY2001, the goal of this targeted grant initiative is to assist 21 law enforcement agencies in creating or strengthening local projects in six topic areas that build trust between police and their communities. Each agency will develop best practices and collateral technical assistance guides that will share their expertise and lessons learned in reducing racial profiling.

Strategy areas include:

- Collecting and analyzing traffic-stop data
- Accountability & supervision
- Recruitment and selection
- Training and education of police and citizens
- Using technology to prevent racial profiling
- Minority community engagement initiatives

Police Integrity National Training Initiative

Funded in FY01, the goal of the Police Integrity Training Initiative is to deliver training on ethics and significant integrity issues to law enforcement officers and community members through the RCPI network. The national training includes two levels of instruction:

1. A basic ethics course for delivery to line officers and first line supervisors.
2. Targeted curricula for delivery to police executives in the following topic areas:
 - Early identification and intervention systems
 - Citizen complaint intake and investigations
 - Managing use of force issues in a community policing environment
 - Racial profiling: issues and dilemmas

By supporting the development of this broad array of initiatives, COPS seeks to create community policing environments that develop trust and mutual respect between police and their communities and to ensure equal treatment for all citizens.
